

Hi Karen!

I wanted to let you know how very pleased we have been with Scrabble. Scrabble was the second of the two dogs we now have adopted. Max was our first. We drove down to the Santa Clara Humane Society. Once we took a look at all the doggies, I couldn't stop coming back to Max. I knew he was the one for our family. We took Max home and introduced him to Rolando's son, Devin. They fell in love.

After a few weeks we thought about getting a companion for Max. We talked about it for a while and contemplated the pros and cons. In the end we decided to go for it. Rolando had been scanning the websites for a while and he came across C.A.R.E. Pets. He read into the organization and found it very well organized. He spotted a puppy that was pretty irresistible. Her name was Heidi. She was a cutie. Rolando and I both told our places of employment that we needed the afternoon off so that we could get our new companion for Max. Heidi looked like Max. They would be great together. So I took off work, raced home, parked my car in the garage and jumped in the truck where Devin, Rolando and Max were all waiting. We took off on our journey for our new adopted doggie.

A few hours later we arrived. We had gotten lost along the way. We had actually passed the location without even noticing. We pulled into the parking lot 15 minutes too late. I ran in and asked where Heidi was. I was sadly informed that another family was looking at Heidi. I was heart broken.

I was told about another doggie that was sweet, loyal, mellow, and very loving. Her name was Scrabble. So I thought she was pretty cute. She had been fostered on a farm with several others. She was used to the life and we had some acreage. We put Scrabble on a lease and brought her outside to get to know her. She sure was mellow. She just sat there. She would roll on her back to let you rub it. Every time a volunteer would walk up they would say, "Hi Scrabble, she is so sweet. If I choose to have another dog, Scrabble would be it." It seemed as though everyone adored her. And so did I.

So after a while of getting to know her we decided she was the one. As we were filling out the paper work, out walked Heidi with her new family. Heidi put her paw on Scrabble's nose to say goodbye. They seemed like long time friends that were parting. We walked Scrabble to the truck. She just lay there the whole time. When we got home, her and Max got a better chance to get to know each other.

Max is very much like an active puppy and Scrabble is a bit mellower. The two combinations are excellent. I couldn't have asked for a better combination. Scrabble is like the Mommy and Max plays the role of the puppy, even though Max is a few months older than Scrabble.

I could not possibly explain how happy I am with my two doggies. I want to thank you, Karen, especially for pointing us in the direction of Scrabble. She has been a wonderful joy in our lives. I want to show you a picture of the two doggies next to Devin, pooped after a long day of running in the back yard.

We highly recommend your organization.
